

At Ted's Cameras, we believe that every customer interaction is an opportunity to inspire, educate, and build lasting relationships. Whether someone is buying their first camera or upgrading to professional gear, our role is to guide them with confidence, care, and expertise.

The FOCUS Sales Training Framework is designed to empower our team with a consistent, customer- first approach to retail excellence. It's more than just a checklist – it's a mindset that ensures every customer feels welcomed, understood, and supported throughout their journey with us.

F - FIRST IMPRESSIONS

O - OPEN-ENDED QUESTIONS

C - CUSTOMISED SOLUTIONS

U - UPSELL WITH VALUE

S - SECURE SATISFACTION

Each section includes clear objectives, actionable steps, and real-world examples to help you bring the framework to life on the shop floor. Use it as a daily reference, a coaching tool, and a foundation for delivering the exceptional service Ted's Cameras is known for.

FIRST IMPRESSIONS

Objective: Create an immediate sense of welcome and trust through professional, friendly interactions.

First impressions are powerful – they set the tone for the entire customer experience. At Ted's Cameras, we aim to make every visitor feel seen, valued, and comfortable from the moment they walk through the door or call the store. Whether it's their first visit or their fiftieth, the way we greet and present ourselves can turn a casual browser into a loyal customer.

Key Actions

Warm Greetings: Acknowledge every customer within 30 seconds of entering. Make eye contact, smile, and use a friendly, natural greeting. For example: "Hello! Welcome to Ted's Cameras. Looking for anything in particular today?" Even if you're helping someone else, a quick "Hi there, I'll be with you shortly!" goes a long way.

Present Professionally: Your appearance is part of the brand. Ensure your body language is open and approachable. A confident, relaxed posture and a genuine smile make a big difference.

Maintain a Welcoming Store: A tidy, well-organized store invites exploration. Keep floors clean, shelves dust-free and displays uncluttered. Ensure demo models are charged and ready to use and that signage is clear and helpful.

Phone Manners: Answer within six rings using a consistent, upbeat tone. For example: "Good afternoon, Ted's Cameras. This is Alex speaking. How can I help you today?" Smile while you speak – it comes through in your voice.

Example

A young couple walks into the store while you're organising stock inside a cabinet. You immediately pause what you're doing, stand up, and greet them with a warm smile.

You: "Hi there! Welcome to Ted's Cameras — is there something we can help you with today?"

The couple visibly relaxes and smiles back. They explain they're heading to New Zealand for their honeymoon and are looking for a camera that will capture their trip better than their phones.

This simple interaction may not result in an immediate sale, but it creates a warm, welcoming atmosphere and sets the foundation for a positive experience that can turn casual browsers into loyal customers.

Ted's Cameras
TRAINING

OPEN-ENDED CONVERSATIONS

Objective: Ask the right questions to understand what the customer really needs.

Great service starts with great conversations. At Ted's Cameras, we don't just sell products—we also sell an experience. To do that, we need to understand their goals, challenges, and preferences. Using open-ended questions help us uncover the “why” behind the purchase, so we can offer truly meaningful solutions.

Key Actions

Open-Ended Questions: Avoid yes/no questions. Instead, invite the customer to share their story. Try:

- “What kind of photos do you usually take?”
- “What are you hoping to capture with your new gear?”
- “What’s working well with your current setup – and what’s not?”

These types of questions show genuine curiosity and help you tailor your advice to the customer’s real needs.

Active Listening: Listening is just as important as asking questions. Show that you’re fully present and engaged — customers should feel heard and understood. Maintain eye contact, smile, and use small verbal cues like “Right,” or “I get that.” Then reflect back what they’ve said to confirm your understanding. Examples:

- “So it sounds like you’re after something lightweight but still powerful – is that right?”
- “That makes sense – fast-moving subjects can be tricky to capture”
- “It sounds like you’re looking to take your photography to the next level – let’s explore some options that fit that goal.”

Reflective listening not only builds rapport, but also reassures the customer that you’ve truly heard them.

Be Genuine: People can instantly sense when a conversation feels scripted. Approach every interaction with curiosity, empathy, and enthusiasm. Whether the customer is buying their first compact camera or upgrading to a professional kit, treat their goals with the same level of respect and excitement.

When you show real interest in their story, they’re more likely to open up and trust your recommendations. That’s how we turn a simple transaction into a lasting relationship.

Ted's Cameras
TRAINING

OPEN-ENDED CONVERSATIONS (EXAMPLE)

Customer: I'm looking for a better camera — mine just isn't cutting it anymore.

You: No problem at all! What kind of photos do you usually take?

Customer: I initially purchased my current camera for travel but now I'm mostly photographing my kids' weekend soccer games. I love trying to capture the action, but most of my shots end up blurry.

You: Ah, that's a really common challenge — fast movement can be tricky to photograph without the right gear. What camera are you using at the moment?

[Customer shows you their compact camera]

You: Got it. Thanks for showing me — that helps a lot. How comfortable are you with things like manual settings, or do you prefer to keep things simple and let the camera do most of the work?

Customer: I usually stick to auto mode. I'm not super technical but I definitely want better photos than my phone

You: Totally fine — there are some great options that'll make a huge difference without being complicated to use. I've got a few cameras in mind that will really help you freeze the action and get those sharp, exciting shots you're after.

Summary

This kind of conversation builds trust, shows you care, and sets the stage for a solution that truly fits their needs.

Ted's Cameras
TRAINING

CUSTOMISED SOLUTIONS

Objective: Offer tailored recommendations that suit the customer's unique situation.

No two customers are the same—and that's exactly why we don't take a cookie-cutter approach. At Ted's Cameras, we pride ourselves on offering genuine, personalised advice that matches each customer's goals, experience level, and budget. Whether they're a beginner or a seasoned shooter, our job is to connect them with the right gear to help them get the most out of their photography and videography.

Key Actions

Personal Suggestions: Use what you've learnt from the conversation to recommend products that suit their needs. Keep it relevant – don't overwhelm them with too many options. Focus on what will genuinely help them and repeat back the pain points they mentioned to you.

Use a Top-Down Approach: Start by showing the customer the best-fit option that fully meets their needs – even if it's at the higher end of their budget. This helps them understand what's possible and sets a clear benchmark. From there, you can work down to more affordable alternatives if needed.

Example: "This model has everything you mentioned – excellent low-light performance, fast autofocus, and 4K video. If that's a bit more than you were planning to spend, I've got a couple of other options that still cover the essentials."

- Link Features to Benefits: Don't just rattle off specs. Explain how each feature will make a difference in their real-world use. For example: "This camera's fast autofocus will help you nail those action shots at the footy – no more blurry photos."
- Hands-On Demos: Let them get a feel for the gear. Show them how to hold it, adjust settings, and take a test shot. Keep your explanations simple and relatable – no jargon unless they're into it.
- Compare When Needed: If there are a couple of good options, walk them through the differences clearly. Help them weigh up the pros and cons so they can make a confident choice.

Example

Customer: "I'm heading off on a six-week backpacking trip through Southeast Asia and want something better than my phone for photos."

You: "That sounds incredible — a trip like that deserves more than just phone snaps! Are you thinking of taking mostly photos, or mixing in some video too?"

Customer: "Probably a bit of both. I'm not super techy though—I just want something easy to use that gets great shots."

You: "Totally understand — you want great quality without having to fuss with complicated settings, especially while travelling light. Based on that, I'd recommend a compact mirrorless camera with a flip screen, built-in stabilisation, and USB-C charging. It's small enough for backpacking, easy to use, and you can even charge it with a power bank when you're off the beaten track."

This kind of tailored experience shows the customer you've really listened – and that you're not just trying to sell them something but helping them find the right fit.

Ted's Cameras
TRAINING

UPSELL WITH VALUE

Objective: Recommend additional items or services that genuinely improve the customer's experience.

At Ted's Cameras, upselling is all about adding genuine value. When we suggest extras, it's because they'll help the customer get more out of their gear, protect their investment, and make their photography journey smoother. When done right, upselling feels like great service – not a sales pitch. It's also important to present these add-ons early in the conversation. This is typically when the customer is in the “consideration” stage of their purchasing decision, and it helps to overcome price related objections later in the interaction.

Key Actions

Suggest Useful Add-Ons: Recommend accessories that make sense based on what they need. For example, if they're picking up a new camera, they'll likely need a memory card, a bag, or a spare battery. If they are shooting video, they may need a microphone, gimbal or lighting solution.

Offer Care-Plan Options: Introduce our Care Plans as a way to protect their gear long-term. These plans can include: Up to 7 years warranty Annual camera checks Complimentary sensor clean Priority repair service Free loan hardware while their gear is being serviced

For example: “If you're planning to use this camera regularly, I would recommend our Total Care Plan – it covers you for up to 7 years and includes annual check-ups, a free sensor clean valued at $99.95, and even loan gear if yours ever needs repairs. It's a great way to keep your setup running smoothly.”

Educate, Don't Push

Explain how each extra will benefit them. For example: “This memory card has faster data write speeds, which is great if you're planning to shoot video or burst photos. Some cameras may also restrict your video features based on the memory card speed.”

Example on following page:

Ted's Cameras
TRAINING

UPSELL WITH VALUE (EXAMPLE)

A customer is interested in buying the mid-range mirrorless camera you have recommended for their travel photography. While you are giving the customer a hands-on demo, you say:

You: This would be a choice — it's a solid all-rounder and will be a great fit for you. While we're testing it out, just note that it'll need a memory card to store your photos. A high-speed card will help you capture the best quality video and shoot continuously without slowing down.

Customer: Oh, I didn't know that! I'll definitely need one of those.

You: Awesome. And how do you plan on carrying the camera while you're travelling around?

Customer: Probably just in my backpack, I guess.

You: That could work, but this lightweight, weather-resistant camera bag might make things easier. It keeps your gear safe, organised, and easy to grab for quick shots — perfect for day trips or exploring new cities.

Customer: That actually sounds really handy.

You: One more thing I'd recommend is our Total Care Plan — it provides up to 7-years priority repair service, annual camera checks, a complimentary sensor clean, and even loan gear if your camera ever needs repairs. It's a great way to protect your investment and keep shooting without any downtime.

Customer: That sounds like great peace of mind. Let's add the memory card, bag, and Care Plan too.

Summary

This interaction shows strong customer engagement through active listening, clear explanations, and thoughtful leading questions. The team member tailors recommendations to the customer's travel needs, explains the value of each add-on, and uses questions to guide the conversation naturally. This approach makes the upsell feel genuine and service-focused — helping the customer feel supported and well-prepared, rather than “sold to.”

Ted's Cameras
TRAINING

SECURE SATISFACTION

Objective: Leave customers feeling confident, reassured, and supported — before and after the sale.

The sale isn't the end of the customer's journey — it's just the beginning. At Ted's Cameras, we want every customer to walk away feeling excited, valued and supported

Key Actions

Close the Sale Confidently – Always Ask for the Sale:

Soft Close: (for hesitant or reflective customers): "How does that sound to you?" "Does that all make sense?" "Would you like a quote to take home and think about?"

Firm Close: (for ready-to-buy customers): "Great – would you like to go ahead with that today?" "Let me grab that from the stockroom for you." "Shall we get this all sorted so you can start using it straight away?"

Helpful Tip: If the customer isn't ready to commit, offer to prepare a detailed quote including the gear, accessories and service options you discussed. This helps them understand the full value — and ensures the sale is attributed to you when they return.

Handle Price Objections by Emphasising Value

When the recommended model feels above budget, reassure the customer by highlighting long-term value and offering smart alternatives.

Helpful tips:

1. Emphasise Long-Term Value:

Show how quality, reliability, and support make the investment worthwhile.

"This model's built to last — it'll grow with your skills, so you won't need to upgrade soon."

"Plus, you'll have our 7-Year Care Plan and in-store support whenever you need it."

2. Offer Thoughtful Alternatives:

Provide realistic, value-driven options that still meet their needs.

"If you'd like to stay closer to your budget, the next model down is a great performer too."

"We've also got second-hand options that are fully tested and come with warranty."

3. Reinforce Confidence:

Ensure the customer feels supported and happy with their choice.

"Whichever way you go, you're getting great gear and our full support."

After Confirming the Sale – Reinforce & Invite Back

Highlight available support: "Our team's always here if you ever need help — pop in, call or email us anytime."

Invite them back: "We've got an event next weekend if you'd like to try out a new lens, or feel free to bring your gear in if you have any questions."

Ted's Cameras
TRAINING

SECURE SATISFACTION (EXAMPLE)

Customer: I'm really excited — I think I'll go ahead with this mirrorless camera and those accessories you mentioned.

You: Fantastic choice! This camera's going to give you heaps of flexibility as you get into photography. The image quality is brilliant, and it's something you can easily grow with as you learn more.

Customer: That's exactly what I was hoping for.

You: Awesome! By the way, we've got a "Touch & Try" event next Saturday — it's a hands-on session where you can experiment with different lenses and accessories, ask questions, and get tips from our team. I'll pop a flyer in your bag with the details. And remember, if you ever get stuck, just bring your gear in — we're always happy to help.

Customer: Thanks so much! That sounds really useful, I can't wait to start shooting!

They leave feeling supported, excited, and more likely to return. This final step is all about leaving a lasting impression – one that turns a one-time shopper into a loyal customer and advocate for Ted's Cameras.

SUMMARY

The FOCUS Framework is your everyday guide to delivering exceptional customer service at Ted's Cameras. It helps you:

- Build trust from the first interaction
- Understand the customer's true needs
- Offer personalised, relevant solutions
- Add real value through thoughtful recommendations
- Leave a lasting, positive impression

Keep this guide close – at the counter, in the break room, or on your device. Revisit it regularly during team huddles or coaching sessions. When we all stay aligned on FOCUS, we create a consistent, memorable experience that keeps customers coming back.

Ted's Cameras
TRAINING